The worship of the Sun is as old as civilization.

I bow to you, O Surya, the Son of Kashyapa Muni, the destroyer of darkness and all sins, whose luster is like that of red Jaswand Flower. The worship of the Sun is as old as civilization.

The Sun that awakens man from darkness, the Sun that is so brilliant that it cannot be seen by the naked eye evokes awe in the human mind. In the Rig-Veda, Surya has been described as the life (atma) of all creation. Surya is praised as the God of Gods (Rig-Veda 1.50.10). Homage is paid to Surya by chanting special names while offering him salutation-Surya Namaskara. These twelve names that we use to worship Surya serve to remind us of his glory and power and to be eternally grateful for his constant blessings in our life here on earth.

Please accept warm greetings and congratulations for the function organized on 7th Feb. 2013 for presentation of "Suryadatta National Lifetime Achievement Award" and "Suryadatta National Awards 2013".

Due to health problem, I am sorry I could not give full justice to the programme; I have also missed an opportunity to listen to the speeches of the eminent awardees.

Being part of your organization, I was hesitant to accept the award. However your love did not allow me to refuse the same. This programme also provided me an opportunity to meet several friends including Manindarjit Singh Bitta and others.

Love and affection of friends like you has always remained the strength in my life. I am sure that I will continue to receive the same in future.

I have my dream about Suryadatta Group of Institutes. Within few years, this Institute should be "Harvard" of India. Please try to fulfil my dream.

About Florence Nightingale

Famously known as 'Lady with the Lamp'.

Florence Nightingale's far-sighted ideas and reforms have influenced the very nature of modern healthcare.

She is known for nursing the sick and wounded soldiers during the Crimean War.

Her greatest achievement was to transform nursing into a respectable profession for women and so in 1860, she established the first professional training school for nurses, the Nightingale Training School at St Thomas' Hospital, London.

She campaigned tirelessly to improve healthcare standards, publishing over 200 books, reports and pamphlets on hospital planning and organisation which are widely read and respected till today; this includes her most famous work 'Notes on Nursing: What It Is and What It Is Not'.

Florence's influence on today's nursing ranges from her ward designs (known as Nightingale Wards), which were developed in response to her realisation that hospital buildings themselves could affect the health and recovery of patients, to pioneering infection control measures and the championing of a healthy diet as a key factor for recovery.

She also believed in the need for specialist midwifery nurses and established a School of Midwifery nursing at King's College Hospital, London which became a model for the country.

Florence is credited for inventing a sort of pie-chart which she called a coxcomb diagram (to show statistics visually) and was the first woman to be elected to the Royal Statistical Society. She was also the second woman to be awarded the Freedom of the City of London Award in 1908.

She inspired the founding of the International Red Cross which still awards the Florence Nightingale Medal to nurses who give exceptional care to the sick and wounded in war and peace.

Born 12th May 1820 at Florence, Italy
Died : 13th August 1910 at London, England

Florence's Early Years

Born in an era when middle-class women were expected to simply make a good marriage and raise a family, Florence sensed a 'calling' from God at an early age and believed she was destined to do something greater with her life. As a child, she was very academic and particularly interested in mathematics. Her religion gave her a strong sense of moral duty to help the poor and, over time, she held a growing belief that nursing was her God-given vocation. She was also perhaps set to follow the family tradition of reform mindedness, such as the example set by her maternal grandfather who was an anti-slavery campaigner.

Paid nursing suffered a reputation as a job for poor, often elderly women, and the popular image was one of drunkenness, bad language and a casual attitude to patients. Despite parental concern, she persisted in her ambition, reading anything she could about health and hospitals. Eventually she persuaded them to allow her to take three months' nursing training at an inspirational hospital and school in Dusseldorf, Germany. Aged 33, she then became superintendent of a hospital for 'gentlewomen' in Harley Street, London.

About Florence Nightingale

The Crimean War

In March 1854, reports flooded in about the dreadful conditions and lack of medical supplies suffered by injured soldiers fighting the Crimean War. The Minister of War, a social acquaintance, invited Florence to oversee the introduction of female nurses into the military hospitals in Turkey. With a party of 38 nurses, Florence arrived in Scutari, Turkey in November and set about organising the hospitals to improve supplies of food, blankets and beds, as well as the general conditions and cleanliness of the hospital. The comforting sight of her checking all even at night earned her the name 'Lady of the Lamp', along with the undying respect of the British soldiers.

Reforming Spirit

The introduction of female nurses to the military hospitals was deemed an outstanding success, Florence returned to Britain a heroine, and donations poured in to the Nightingale Fund. The money collected enabled Florence to continue her reform of nursing in the civil hospitals of Britain after the war. She was determined to never repeat the medical mistakes of the two-year long war, for this were never repeated, she vividly communicated the needs for medical reform using statistical charts showing that more men had died from disease than from war wounds. She then instigated a Royal Commission into the health of the army which led to a large number of improvements and saved the lives of many.

Her attention later turned to the health of the British army in India and she demonstrated that bad drainage, contaminated water, overcrowding and poor ventilation were causing the high death rate. She concluded that the health of the army and the people of India had to go hand in hand and so campaigned to improve the sanitary conditions of the country as a whole. The Nightingale Training School was established in 1860 using donations from the Nightingale Fund. Its reputation soon spread and Nightingale nurses were requested to start new schools all over the world, including Australia, America and Africa. Despite often being confined to her sick bed, by what we now believe was a bacterial infection known as brucellosis, Florence continued as a driving force behind the scenes, writing some 13000 letters as part of her campaigns.

She met Queen Victoria on many occasions and exchanged correspondence for over thirty years.

Florence was awarded the Royal Red Cross in 1883.

Then in 1907 she became the first woman to receive the Order of Merit, Britain's highest civilian decoration.

Florence died aged 90, on 13th August 1910, and was buried alongside the graves of other family members in East Wellow, Hampshire.
